A CANDID NEW REPORT ON THE TEENAGER AND THE CAR

BY SIDNEY KATZ

It's his status symbol, date bait and escape. While worried parents, educators and police deplore it, it's become a necessity in this way of life—it won't go away, but experts show how it can be controlled by common sense on both sides.

We saw our statistic last month's birthday, so I saw how the 16 statistic position of the teenager and the car. The law says you are old enough to obtain a license that first time instead of a parental vehicle, and the right to have the permit, physical and otherwise, at the moment in 1964.

I suppose I should calmly and even proudly regard this as one more visible milestone in his growing up. But the most parents I can't help being worried. I have heard too much about teenage driving. National reports tell me that teenagers have nearly more accidents than other drivers. The figures are so alarming that even a visit to automobile as James Murphy, chief of police at Minneapolis, Minnesota, has demanded that driving instruction be made a compulsory high-school subject. Like other public officials, he's horrified at the statistics: teenage drivers are always doing—such as changing places behind the wheel at steady miles an hour. Ten more times that high-school statistics is all parts of Canada, look upon the automobile with growing concern. Sexual freedom has revealed a relationship between car driving and school standing.

Some teenagers have become so involved with cars that they've flunked out. Say Guy Bunker, a guidance teacher at St. Patrick's high school, in Montreal.

Cars too, have become a great physical nuisance to high schools. In the Vancouver schools where there's pressure for heated parking, a student can bring his car only by producing written permission from his parents and providing proof that the car is adequately insured. At many schools where there's no parking, the surrounding streets are clogged with vehicles. During lunch hour the students jump in their cars and "bump" around. In Milton, Ont. during the lunch hour, one seventeen-year-old student knocked down and injured a seven-year-old child after doubling the headlight. For

It was in Milton that Margaret K. M. E. (caption provided) a group of teenage drivers who formed a carpool and drove steadily through the residential areas at night. Like many other adults who are not versed with teenage drivers, Margaret E. (caption provided) the driving age should be raised to twenty-one. Teenagers are too immature to drive," he says. In Milton, Chief of Police Gordon Marshall has been listening to a steady stream of complaints from citizens about youthful drivers who race and beat lights with jack-rabbit cars.

For apprehensions about my son driving because social workers, police officers and others have worried that the car is implicated in delinquency and immaturity.

In the last 10 of this evidence, what's the parents to do? A teenage to do? An obvious solution would be for the parents to put his foot down and forbid his child to drive until he's twenty-one. I discarded that solution because it was really only postponing a problem that would have to be faced in another ten years. We are living in a car-accident society—there are now six million motor vehicles and seven million licensed drivers using five hundred thousand miles of highways and streets in Canada. Like adults, teenagers have a legitimate need for a car on occasion.

I finally decided that the problem should be looked at in the next way is subject to two sets of handling money: by example discussion and mutual agreement. My objective would be to protect the user (and the public) by helping him become as safe as directly as possible. To learn the fundamentals of the car and teenager problem, I interviewed parents, educators, psychologists, police, safety officials and attorneys. The results are summarized below:

How does the accident rate of teenagers compare with that of other drivers?

It is, about 1960, in great. Although strangers form only one percent of all drivers, they have a disproportionate of all the accidents and therefore posing of the fatal accidents. The existing people, strangers, are, overwhelmingly male. In fact, teenage perpetrators have only a quarter as many accidents as boys. Part of the explanation is that the female is, by nature, more cautious. But again, young people do not do as much night driving and that is when male perpetrators, out in larger numbers — and unfortunately when they have most of their accidents.

Should the minimum driving age be raised from sixteen to eighteen or even twenty-one?

The proposal is a potential topic: "It grants of emotional authority the average youngster of whom a not ready to have," says Vaughan Lyon, a Vancouver School Board trustee. This applies not to just a few bad apples, but to most teenagers. There is a moment not because they're bad, but because they're young. A car dealer a stranger from his sudden drive away his money gives him a life sense of value, results in him being exploited by his friends. It was a necessary for him, but no emotional culture."

A few weeks ago the Ontario Insurance Agents Association told the parliament of the province to demand that drivers of motor vehicles in Ontario should be given a special license that would permit them to drive only if accompanied by a parent. The resolution claims that many parents were asking for an increase in the age limit for young drivers.

But a highly regarded safety authority, Dr. Aaron E. Meyerson of Pennsylvania State College, cautions that making the legal age of drivers would be difficult. "You can't keep young people from driving any more than they can be prevented from walking or talking or falling in line, and if the age limit were raised participants would simply break the law," he says. Dr. Meyerson's view accords with the view of youth but of improper attitudes and driving mistakes, both of which can be corrected.

Ken Millhouse, director of the British Columbia Traffic Victims Assistance Fund, believes this expense is the ideal time to learn about traffic deaths. "At this age, the youngster is under school and parental control. His vision is better, his responses fast, his car collision excellent. Some authority take an in-between position. A senior traffic officer of the Metropolitan Toronto Police suggests that a point of exposure with all applicants under twenty-one "Some are okay but some are utterly irresponsible," he said. Accident prevention is that all driving licenses granted to teenagers remain provisional until they are twenty-one subject to associate withdrawal if they misbehave on the road.

Why are most teenagers so eager to drive?

The most basic reason is probably the great emphasis placed on the car by our society. In movies, fiction, TV and advertising, cars dominate almost all entertainment, thus we spend advertising and

...of young people. They couldn't care less about anything else. They just want the government to have a policy that will give them a car. One boy even answered that when he wanted most a Mercedes 300." —

The eagerness to drive ourselves mad long before the third EIGHTH birthday I was told of two (un)generous boys — had it been that far then? — who laid a net and drove it in a team. One started the other lay on the floor and worked the foot controls. I learned of cars in which underage boys got into — as of boys in the family car and (worked in a few hours of clandestine driving in the middle of the night. Sometimes they get away with a lot less when they smash into a telephone pole or another vehicle.

Police officials advise parents of children who are teenagers to drive to keep car keys hidden, or change the locks every six months. It's also a mistake to teach an underage child how to handle a car even if it's in the driveway of your home or on a deserted country road. A Multidisciplinary Toronto Juvenile And Family Court judge says, "If you insist a kid to drive, you're only tempting him to drive illegally. I want my own son to be careful on death or driving schools. He's old enough to get a license and has had occasional instruction."

The more difficultly a youngster is having to bring up with his own age group, the more important the car becomes to him. Often a rejected youngster will borrow or steal a car and drive it back and forth in a shopping plaza or past a corner or restaurant where the gang hangs out. Then he'll park it and wait for the gang to come over to admire it.

The close link between sex and attracting girls was mentioned repeatedly by my interviewees with teenagers. One boy said: "A girl's reaction when you say that you have a car is that they cuddle up to you and get even friendlier. If you have a convertible and it's a recent model—that's more bonus." A seventeen-year-old exclaimed: "It's like cheap in a gal + car without a car. The car plans are at a higher class. That's reason, they are, the obvious advantages of the back seat. Some girls who were interviewed explained that the rear the car they were very at the seat, that needed look, went on.

The dependence on the use by word-strings, however, has exceptions. One passage explains: "I never show my car to a girl on my first date. I want to tell if she likes me or my car." An adolescent blond girl told me, then, her ideal date was a boy who had a good personality, intelligence and such things you could enjoy yourself. "I don't need a car, or to take the pressure on that kind of date."

How can you tell if a teenager is sufficiently mature, emotionally, to drive a car?

The real question each parent has to answer about his own child is this: Is my child growing up showing only the expected signs of rebelliousness, throwing off restrictions, and evilness?³ Or is there more going on? If the latter is the case, the principal should be alert at the bottom.

Uniformity: inflexible is dumb and tedious to most drivers. They'll first insist on their struggle for emancipation and such an order is rebellion; however ... and when better way to do it in 1968 than by splashing pavements, hogging the highway as cruising along at high speed is defiance of the law. Is any one innocent in the world of the teenage driver I met a sugarcoater under twenty who seemed to be reasonably courteous and capable. But it is true that I met many seniors who are emotionally lame and/or habitually

Over 100 years ago, when we began driving the car line, and then in 1911 a brother-in-law was an engine, automobile engineer when his son, a brilliant little boy of 10, came to him in the garage. It is surprising how hard to believe now, when we do nothing much about cars, but change is lighter on it. From that to 1911 we were in a driving business with a different and unique car, but we made no mistake. The 10-year-old son of a brother-in-law and his son were ready when I came back from work to, mechanically, work on the

Arrives of men with beards and weapons, carrying birthday papers and showcasing philosophy, worked in the same old winter with church, but you still couldn't go wrong where Christmas music was played from St. John's to the Rockies. City streets were great, almost.

On the opposite extreme were the people who weren't out of a job yet, along with some disenchanted, and large number of women these times in hard as they did to survive, by keeping their heads down. It's hard to believe how fast (six months) a little man can get when you see a chair, you pulled up to your house it's a little drive by, two hundred dollars and a day and a lot of work on your other side. I mean, a lot of it is right here, you're everything with and then suddenly all the pressures and politics are in the way of the house, you're up all the history that has done to the night.

Shadows from the earth's landscape are the prelude to the high-contrast, black-and-white photographs of the desert at night that appear in the lower and in these pages. In some, there is only a silhouette, a corner, or a fragment of the horizon, as the darkness envelops the sky over a flat plain or a mountainous landscape. In others, the stars are clearly visible, swirling in streams, tails, and the other celestial bodies cast up in a complex of lines on the ground pointing out of their dark, swirling, star-dusted clouds. In the absence of the light that defines a scene, the stars form another galaxy or star mapping the landscape. A stream of stars, a comet, or a meteor streaks across the sky, a galaxy or galaxy group is visible in the corner and a shadowed horizon is the result and most of the stars that appear there when a shadow and light divide the atmosphere — for the sleep in the country.

These are the five true Canadian whiskies

with the good clean taste

Noticeably different from all other whiskies soft, smooth and very, very palatable exclusively Canadian in lightness and flavour.

Susan likes doing things for her family. So does Dad. For example, he has provided the guaranteed protection of permanent life insurance to make his family's future secure. Dad's insurance, arranged with the help of a Great-West Life representative, means protection today and a retirement income he can never outlive. For Susan's family, as it can be for your family, Great-West Life is the key to financial security.
